NAME Oath of the Dragonlord

SYMBOL

ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

Kyrenos was born among a wandering centaur herd that travelled the open lands of Thylea. He knew no permanent home; the road, the seasons and his herd were his life.
Then he met Adara. She loved old texts, poems and music, and taught Kyrenos that a song could preserve a memory long after the singer was gone. He fell deeply in love with her. Around the campfire, Adara sang while Kyrenos slowly learned to write and sing beside her.
One night a dragon attacked the herd. Fire consumed their camp and scattered the survivors. Kyrenos fought desperately, but found Adara mortally wounded. She died in his arms, asking him never to let their stories and songs disappear.
Afterward Kyrenos travelled alone, taking the name Dragonbane. He eventually joined a group of paladins who followed the Oath of the Dragonlord. Their discipline and desire to protect others gave him a new purpose. He eventually became a paladin himself.
Kyrenos now travels as a warrior and protector. Yet whenever the camp grows quiet, he returns to Adara's old songbook. He writes poems, collects stories and composes songs in her memory.
His sword is his oath to protect the living. His songs are his promise to remember the dead.
Deep inside, Kyrenos is still searching for a way to live with the loss of the centaur who was the love of his life.

CHARACTER BACKSTORY

Kyrenos keeps Adara's worn songbook wrapped in leather. He also carries a lute, quill, ink and parchment so he can continue her work.
He is happiest around a campfire, listening to stories or quietly adding a verse of his own.
